

CONTRACTS
on a construction site: how to deal with the responsibilities on well-being at work

PRACTICE AREAS

The legislation on the well-being of workers at work imposes certain very strict obligations to employers. Furthermore, specific rules apply with regard to construction sites, according to which the project supervisor bears the final responsibility for the implementation of the rules with regard to health and safety at work.

Nevertheless, ensuring the well being of workers present on construction sites can be very difficult, even more in this period of coronavirus.

What are the responsibilities of the project director?
How can he deal with the imposed social distancing?

This article provides you with an updated and practical overview of the most relevant rules to that extend.
